Section-I – INFORMATION TO AGENCIES

The purpose of this document is to provide interested parties with information to enable them to prepare and submit a proposal to conduct the evaluation study. The short details of the projects, terms of reference, submission of proposals, conditions, evaluation and opening of proposals are given as following:

1.1 Overview of the National Rural Health Mission

The Government of India launched the National Rural Health Mission in April, 2005 to address the core issues in the health sector so that it becomes more vibrant and provide accessible, affordable and equitable health care services to the rural poor. The National Rural Health Mission represents a major departure from the past, in that central government health financing is now directed to the development of state health systems rather than being confined to a select number of national health programmes. There are many considerations behind such a shift. Such a shift is important for improving the health of public health systems because all national health programmes taken together account for only a small part of morbidities – in the range of about 20 to 30% only. Another reason for this shift is because investment in health systems development is essential for good results even for national disease control and RCH programmes. Also for investment in health funding to impact on health equity and on poverty, larger funds have to flow for health systems to those very states whose ability to raise resources internally are most limited and who have a greater burden of poverty and inequity and therefore a greater burden of disease to bear.

As in our federal polity, health is a state subject, the NRHM requires States to submit sector wide well integrated state plans which it then jointly with the states, appraises for consistency with the NRHM framework for implementation – a common framework that the center and the states have agreed to and around which a national consensus has been built. Based on this appraisal the state plans are approved and the NRHM then provides the financial resources and technical support needed to implement these plans.

The NRHM framework represents a conscious decision to strengthen public health systems and the role of the state as health care provider. The NRHM recognizes the need to make optimal use of the private sector to strengthen public health systems and to increase access to medical care for the poor. But given the uneven growth of the private sector, its current situation in regulation and the issues of access to the poor, the public health care provider remains the mainstay of public health policy. There has been concern on whether such an approach is pragmatic given the poor record of performance of the public health systems. The NRHM framework is built on an understanding that low and declining public investment in health care and the many structural problems in the way the public health systems have been organized are the main reasons why the public health system has been functioning poorly and this must be addressed through increased public expenditure and through architectural correction of the public health system.

The NRHM is therefore about increasing public expenditure on health care from the current 0.9% of the GDP to 2 to 3% of the GDP. The corollaries of such a policy directive are not only an increased central government budgetary outlay for health, but that the states also make a matching increase – at least 10% of the budget annually including a 15% contribution into the NRHM plan, and that the centre – state financing ratio shifts from the current 80:20 to at least a 60:40 ratio in this plan period. Another important corollary is that the state health sector develops the capacities to absorb such fund flows. There are currently many constraints, especially in the EAG states to absorbing these funds, and the poorest performing states which require the largest infusion of resources have some of the greatest problems in being able to expend the funds already with them. This is one of the main reasons why a process of reforming and strengthening the state health systems needs to go hand in hand with the increase of fund flows.

The NRHM is thus also about health sector reform an “architectural correction” of the public health system so as to make it “equitable, affordable and effective.” Such architectural correction is organized around five pillars, each of which is made up of a number of overlapping core strategies.

a) Increasing Participation and Ownership by the Community (what is often referred to as communitisation). This is sought to be achieved through an increased role for PRIs, through the ASHA programme, through the village health and sanitation committee, through increased public participation in hospital development committees and district health societies and in the district and village health planning efforts and by a special community monitoring initiative, and through a greater space for NGO participation.

b) Improved Management Capacity. The core of this is professionalizing management by building up management and public health skills in the existing workforce, supplemented by inculcation of management personnel into the system. Another major component of this is the creation of institutional capacities for improved management in the form of functional programme management units, strengthened directorates of health services, strengthened and outcome oriented state institutes of health and family welfare that ensure that the workforce in every facility has the necessary skills to deliver its service guarantees and the creation of state health resource centers that act as strategic planning units and managers of change. Increased decentralization in management, public participation and accountability in the management through participatory decision making structures like the hospital development committees and the district health societies is another major strategy of improving public health system functioning.

c) Flexible Financing: The central strategy of this pillar is the provision of untied funds to every level- to the village health and sanitation committee, to the sub-center, to the PHC, to the CHC and district hospital. Even the strategy of providing a resource envelope to each district and state which the district/state has to use against an approved plan that it develops is an unprecedented level of financing flexibility. Financing packages for demand side financing and various forms of risk pooling where money follows the patient are also major strategies declared by the NRHM. The Janani Suraksha Yojana is one major, almost overwhelming example of the demand side financing option, so much so that in many places the NRHM is being identified with it. But the challenge of the NRHM is to be able to build more comprehensive packages that ensure allocative efficiencies within the public health system and that address equity concerns for the entire range of curative care needs.

d) Innovations in human resources development for the health sector: The central challenge of the NRHM is to find definitive answers to the old questions about ensuring adequate recruitment for the public health system and adequate functionality of those recruited. Breaking a vicious cycle where poor performance of the workforce has justified poor attention to solving the fundamental problems of human resource development, the NRHM lays downs a minimum human resource requirement for each facility level and follows up to ensure that states agree to a road map to close these gaps. The most important outcome of this is the dramatic increase in the number of nursing and allied staff being brought into the system. Contractual appointment route to immediately fill gaps as well as ensure local residency, incentives and innovation to find staff to work in hitherto underserved areas and the use of multi-skilling and multi-tasking options are examples of other innovations that seek to find new solutions to old problems. Expansion of professional and technical education and increasing access of weaker sections to such education are also a core strategy.

e) Setting of standards and norms with monitoring: The prescription of the IPHS norms marks one of the most important core strategies of the mission. This has been followed up by a facility survey to identify gaps and funding is directed to closing the gaps so identified. Gaps in equipment are relatively easily addressed. Gaps in drug supplies need an adequate drug procurement and distribution policy. Gaps in infrastructure require an efficient mechanism of completing civil works in time with quality. Gaps in human resource require expansion of education plus workforce reforms and innovations. And to ensure that states are seized of this task and have built road maps to close these gaps and are traversing down these road maps they have set themselves, the NRHM aims to provide adequate technical facilitation and monitoring support.

Each of these five pillars and the many core strategies that they are composed of must eventually impact on 24 critical areas of concern which the NRHM framework for implementation identifies. These 14 areas of critical concern are essential cornerstones of an effective health system. The first and most important of these is the responsibility of creating what the framework calls “Fully functional Health facilities”. Whether it is a sub-center, or a PHC, a CHC or a district hospital- the NRHM framework spells out a service guarantee expected of that level and the outcome most expected from the Mission is that each facility is able to fulfil this guarantee. The list of the 14 critical areas is given below:

1) Fully Functional Facilities- from sub-center to district hospital
2) Increasing and Improving Human resources in rural areas
3) Accountable health delivery
4) Effective decentralisation
5) Reduced MMR, IMR and TFR
6) Action for Preventive and promotive health
7) Disease surveillance
8) Hamlet to hospital referral linkage
9) Health information systems
10) Planning and monitoring with community ownership
11) Equity issues: Women Empowerment; securing entitlements for SCs/STs/OBCs and minorities
12) Convergence - with HIV/AIDS; AYUSH; chronic diseases, malnutrition, safe drinking water - with community support
13) Chronic disease burden
14) Social security to poor – for reducing impoverishment and bankruptcy related to ill health.
